

When we came back home, we decided to live out our action plan. We were thinking for sometime what should it look like. We needed to teach people something that we learnt in Trogen this year. But then we realized that as we have a small school, we know each other for years, but actually, we don't know which thoughts does the person have although I see him/her every single day. I don't know what does he/she thinks about racism, sexism, nationalism, chauvinism and other forms of discrimination. So looking at this we decided to make a discussion to get to know each other a bit more. And we succeeded! Moreover, to show people that having a conversation it's not that boring, we used a few warm-ups, that teachers in our workshops showed us.

After having the discussion we were impressed with all those interesting thoughts these kids have. At firstly, we thought that during the discussion they will just sit bored, thinking about the end of lesson. But a lot of people shared with us their opinion about almost each type of discrimination. If there were any teachers in our 'lesson' (except of our English teacher) they would probably understand that that is really cool to have such an unusual (for our school) activity. After all we are very thankful that we've visited the Youth Forum, because we've made some important conclusions for ourselves, met a lot of new amicable people and just spent time fun and with benefit. Thank you, Trogen!
